Correction

A quote in the Media Maven column in the June 29 edition of the North Coast Journal contained a misattribution. The paragraph should have read:

"Sims argues that maybe it is better to know how much hatred is out there. When Bryant said the experiences that she and Cutcha Risling Baldy, as people of color, have different experiences than do Greenson and Sims, who are white. Sims said: 'The reason I don't doubt that your experience and Cutcha's experience is different is because I see it written out day after day. And I wonder if it is not good to document that.'"

The Journal regrets the error.

Public Defender's Job May Rest on His Words

By Kimberly Wear
kim@northcoastjournal.com

Inside the 1001 Fourth St. Public Defender's Office building.
Mark McKenna

The future of Public Defender David Marcus' so-far short but contested tenure could rest on the answers he gave under oath to a local attorney and one-time member of the office who is looking to overturn his appointment.

A judge last week dismissed Patrik Griego's lawsuit alleging Marcus did not meet the minimum qualifications required for the post, but gave Griego 30 days to refile, saying he should have more information about his contention after the deposition, which took place July 3 as the Journal was going to press.

While visiting Judge Marjorie Carter noted at the June 29 hearing that her "inclination" was to overrule the county's motion to dismiss the case and "get on with this," she said there needs to be further clarification on the extent of Marcus' legal work history before the lawsuit could proceed.

"You will probably know more after your deposition," Carter said told Griego after hearing brief statements from attorneys in the case.

Outside of the hearing, Griego said he agreed with the judge.

"We feel pretty confident that this idea that he worked for a friend's law firm was just made up," Griego said after the hearing.

For his part, Marcus wrote in an email sent to the Journal on Sunday that he found Griego's comments questioning whether he worked with the firm Cella, Lange and Cella "troubling."

"I agree with the Court's ruling finding the petition deficient, and hope this matter will soon be concluded. There was and is no basis for the suit," he wrote. "Counsel's comments are at best mistaken, and it is disappointing that he would engage in such unfounded speculation. I love this community and look forward to being of service to it for years to come."

Griego's lawsuit centers on the California government code section that states public defender candidates must have "been a practicing attorney in all the courts of the state for at least the year preceding the date of his election or appointment."

Exactly what the statute that dates back to 1921 denotes is a matter of debate between Griego and the county — and there doesn't appear to be any state case law to lend immediate clarification.

Under Humboldt County's government code, a candidate for the public defender's post need only be licensed to practice law in California in the year prior to an appointment — which Marcus was.

If there is found to be a divergence between the two codes, the state statute would take precedence.

Griego argued during the court hearing that the state code requires more than just being an attorney with an active status, but also making appearances — either in person or via legal filings — in both the criminal and civil courts.

Marcus, he contends, did not meet that threshold, with questions being raised about whether the public defender practiced law at all during the year before his appointment while he was living in Florida and working as an insurance adjuster.

Griego said the criteria was included by lawmakers to ensure the indigent defendants being served by the public defender's office were afforded qualified counsel.

County Counsel Jeffrey Blanck asserted that the state simply requires a public defender to have been a practicing attorney — which could include giving legal advice or preparing documents — before taking office, adding there was no case law he found with a requirement to have “stepped foot in a courtroom.”

“It's our position he was a practicing attorney,” Blanck told the judge.

Blanck said the statute boils down to the question: Have you done legal work in the past 12 months?

“If the answer is yes, I don't think it needs to be quantified as to what is too much and what is too little,” Blanck told the judge.

Carter acknowledged at last week's hearing that an interpretation of the statute's meaning would need to be sorted out but she said that was not the immediate issue before the court at that time.

That was a decision on whether the case would proceed — which she allowed in a way by giving Griego the opportunity to flesh out his argument that Marcus was not qualified to have been appointed in the first place.

Marcus last practiced criminal law when he served as Lassen County's public defender from 2005 to 2011. His time there — like here — was marked with controversy, including a grand jury report that found he only spent 30 to 40 percent of the day at work.

He later worked as a contract attorney for the Walnut Creek law firm Cella, Lange and Cella while living in Florida from 2012 through 2016, according to the resume Marcus submitted to Humboldt County.

What specific legal work he did for the firm during that time is unclear — and rests at the heart of Griego's case.

Marcus' troubles in Humboldt started almost immediately after his hiring in February.

Members of the local defense bar criticized the county's process shortly after his selection was announced, saying the interview panel that advised the Humboldt County Board of Supervisors lacked a single defense attorney to balance out a law enforcement-heavy group that included District Attorney Maggie Fleming, Undersheriff William Honsal and Probation Chief Bill Damiano.

Soon afterward, questions about Marcus' qualifications emerged.

The board of supervisors, meanwhile, touted Marcus' two decades of criminal defense experience before leaving Lassen County in a March statement that also stated he “meets all statutory requirements for the position.”

That was followed by pair of letters from public defender's office staff and attorneys with scathing assessments of Marcus' ability to do the job.

For now, the case is on track to be refiled.

Blanck stated in an email to the Journal that the county agrees “with the Court's ruling that the Petitioners had not stated sufficient facts to determine whether or not the practicing law standard was met.”

“We will wait and see what they put in their Second Amended Writ,” the county counsel wrote. ●

RSVP: I Will Not Attend Your Weed Wedding

I'm over the word "infused." I am over reading about cannabis-infused cocktails, bread, baking soda, bath salts, olive oil, etc. I get why these products are potentially useful but can we be done? Can we be done fetishizing the brand value of cannabis and trying to shoehorn it into every aspect of our lives? It's. So. Boring. Granted, I have something of a confirmation bias about this as I use Google Alerts to keep me up to date on cannabis/marijuana news, so every day there's a new edible/beauty product/exercise routine that involves cannabis as click-hungry headline artists in desperate lifestyle sections elbow for the attention of a declining readership. No, I am not above said behavior. But that's my professional life. When it comes to my personal life, I am not going to let the phrase "cannabis-infused wedding" pass across my news feed (looking at you San Luis Obispo Tribune) without making something abundantly clear to my soon-to-be-married friends:

No. I love you, but no. Well, OK. If cannabis is how you make your income and start your day, or it's part of your meet-cute story, then I'm going to support your decision to wear an ugly-ass wreath made

Do better.

The thing is, weddings are freaking stressful. They're stressful for you, they're stressful for us. If you and your mother-in-law need to take a hit to stay out of Bridezilla mode, I SUPPORT YOU. And it's your special day, so you do you. But I don't want to put on my nicest sundress and do my hair just to get hit with a cloud of smoke. It's just as freaking annoying as cigarettes and just as pungent. And I don't want to haul my ass to Shelter Cove on a blazing hot summer weekend just to spend an entire afternoon making sure the toddlers aren't getting into the edibles you decided to hand out like, well, candy. And honestly? Though I get the homely agrarian earnestness of appreciating a perfect tapered bud with its tiny hairs and tight leaves, from a distance they have all the aesthetic resonance of pine cones. Really, they're just little green lumps. If you're color blind they look like rabbit pellets.

Rant done. You know I love you, cannabis-loving friends. I'll be there for you when the crop fails or the baby starts teething. But if we're tight enough that you're inviting me to your special day, we're tight enough for me to try to talk you out of some tacky decisions. And stoned people can be boring as shit. So if you plan on inviting everyone in attendance to blaze before you've even wheeled out the cake, let me know. I will buy you something mid-pricey off the registry, send my regrets and make plans to hang out once you're back from the honeymoon.

Our Shrinking Habitat

Proposed cannabis ordinance sacrifices too much

By Amy Gustin

views@northcoastjournal.com

For too long now, Humboldt County has encouraged the reckless and destructive expansion of black market marijuana in forest habitat. The recently proposed commercial marijuana ordinance continues this dismal policy. Rather than learning from the massive failure of the medical marijuana ordinance, the proposed commercial marijuana ordinance continues to coddle black market growers. Rather than halting the green rush, it makes it easier to permit new grows in Humboldt's forest habitat. It continues to take us in the wrong direction.

By all measurements, the current medical marijuana permit process stands as a spectacular failure. Despite efforts to appeal to black market growers, most did not return the interest. There are at least 8,000 outdoor grows in Humboldt, and who knows how many indoor grows. Yet, according to John Ford, director of the Planning and Building Department, only 2,337 permit applications were filed. Of these initial applications filed, only 310 have completed the permit process and await review. I looked at 10 permit applications for grows in my neighborhood in Ettersburg. Only one had completed the process. The rest appear to have done little or nothing since they applied. Recently, the Planning and Building Department met with the Board of Supervisors to strategize on how to encourage follow through on the thousands of outstanding permit applications. Most disturbing is that many of the new grow applicants have gone ahead and put in a grow scene before completing the process or receiving a permit. Many existing grows expanded without completing the application process, as well. Far from halting the green rush or bringing Humboldt's growers into compliance, the permit process provided cover for black market expansion.

Given that we have thousands of existing grows damaging Humboldt's vitally important habitat, why does the proposed ordinance relax rules for siting new grows? The only land protected from expansion is zoned for timber production (TPZ). Most land zoned rural residential (RA) is equally forested, yet new grows are allowed on this zoning designation in Humboldt's forest habitat. The failure of groups like EPIC to defend these important forest lands made no sense until we saw the career change made by Natalynne DeLapp, who now advocates for growers.

The proposed ordinance removes the requirement for new grows to be sited on prime agricultural soil. I understand that prime agricultural land has skyrocketed in price. Prices in Humboldt's forest habitat have skyrocketed as well. The solution is to put the brakes on the green rush by refusing to permit new grows. No new grows, along with stringent vetting of existing grows, would send the message that Humboldt is not open to endless exploitation by black market growers.

Humboldt lies at the heart of the California Floristic Province, one of Earth's biodiversity hotspots. This biological treasure deserves protection. According to the Living Planet Report of 2016, Earth lost 58 percent of its biodiversity since 1970. The number one cause of extinctions is habitat loss and degradation. We need to conserve and enhance our biodiversity, not fragment and degrade habitat with yet more marijuana clearcuts and new access roads. Converting Humboldt's wild forest habitat to agriculture must stop. Roads and clearcuts fragment the landscape, providing a direct barrier to numerous species. They also create edge habitat, which is more open, creating increased predation for other species. Simply put, the more development that takes place in forest habitat, the less suitable it becomes to the full array of species that call it home.

The green rush is a terrible crime perpetrated against one of the world's biological treasures. It is also incredibly shortsighted. As marijuana is legalized in more places, its price falls. As the price support provided by prohibition recedes, prices will continue to fall. Habitat only becomes more valuable. Sacrificing what makes Humboldt special makes no sense. Humboldt's future depends on its habitat, not the black market.

Estate Sales to County Employees Prompts Probe

Humboldt County Sheriff William Honsal says current and former employees of his office will be facing some tough questions after he launched an investigation into possible improprieties involving the sale of estate assets managed by the public administrator's office.

Falling under the auspices of the coroner's office, which came within the sheriff's oversight in February of 2015, the public administrator's office takes over if a person dies without a will or anyone coming forward to oversee the settlement of the estate.

That includes conducting a full accounting of estate assets, paying off debts and arranging the burial as well as liquidating the estate and distributing the proceeds to any heirs.

If an individual dies without beneficiaries, the money goes to the state.

Honsal says no one has been placed on leave in connection with the investigation, which will be turned over to the district attorney's office to determine if there was any "criminal intent." He has hired an outside investigator to assist with the probe.

At the center of the investigation is a California government code section that makes it a crime for a public administrator and "any deputy or agent of such officer" to purchase those estate items directly or indirectly, or to otherwise benefit — personally or in association with someone else — from such a transaction.

"Unfortunately, no, this is not a single incident," Honsal says when asked about the circumstances. "This is an ongoing practice that happened previous to the transition (under the sheriff's office) that appears to be carried over from the transition."

In a report by the Lost Coast Outpost's Ryan Burns, Honsal says the situation came to his attention when the Outpost began making inquiries and filed a public records request after receiving a tip regarding the office's handling of a particular estate.

Honsal told the Journal in a June 30 interview that in addition to the investigation, he has instituted a policy that prohibits past and present employees of the sheriff's office, their close friends and family members from purchasing any property or assets under the public administrator's office.

He says part of the investigation will look at whether that policy should be changed moving forward.

State code does not outline a specific process for liquidating an estate — including anything from household items like lawnmowers and china to actual homes — and the county has followed a number of practices over the years.

Those include holding garage sales, using auction houses or Craigslist for specific items, selling in bulk to stores or even at one point operating an in-house outlet at the public administrator's office, Honsal says.

All of the transactions are tracked and overseen by an attorney and the Humboldt County Superior Court.

"The idea here is to get as much money as we can for estate property as soon as possible so the money can be distributed to the heirs," Honsal says.

He also states that the "family has a right to object to how property is being liquidated."

Once the investigation and the district attorney office's review is concluded, Honsal says he will release the results to the public "so they can see what has happened and to make sure it doesn't happen again in the future."

"Any arrest that's made has to be supported by probable cause."

— Arcata Police Chief Tom Chapman at a press conference called by the group Justice for Josiah to discuss concerns about the investigation into the stabbing death of Humboldt State University student David Josiah Lawson, whose mother Michelle-Charmaine Lawson says she wants to make sure "this does not get swept under the rug." Comment Of The Week

"Journalists are supposed to inform us, what we do with the information is really none of their business and when it becomes their focus, journalism becomes an attempt to control us."

Community

The Journal's annual photo contest

Stunning sunsets. Lupine fields. Towering redwoods. Races. Parades. Smiles. Protests. Stolen moments (we see you, couple kissing in the hollowed out stump!). We asked you to think about the word “community” and then snap a photo capturing it. In return, we received more than 160 images. They are alternately funny, beautiful, endearing, heartwarming and challenging. From these, the Journal editorial staff chose a single winner. It was no easy task, evidenced by the fact that 45 different images wound up in our judges’ top-20 rankings, meaning there was little consensus. There was, however, a clear-cut winner. Briar Parkinson’s black and white of two boys sharing a laugh in their baseball uniforms got top honors from two judges and a second-place nod from the third. Out of 60 possible points, it earned 59. The runner up — a darling picture of a little girl and a river otter sharing a moment — finished with 41 points. Visit www.northcoastjournal.com to see the whole collection and take a moment to appreciate our community. And if you feel our judges missed the boat, please weigh in.

— Thadeus Greenson

Jonathan DeSoto

Stephany Joy

Table Talk

Elevated doughnuts.

Hum Plate Round-up

Breakfast sweets and grilled cheese get serious

Story and photos by Jennifer Fumiko Cahill

tabletalk@northcoastjournal.com

Doughnuts Rising

Sit-down doughnut options are too few and far between. And yet the doughnut should be a legitimate breakfast option alongside bacon and eggs, pancakes and waffles. Drive-thru doughnut shops are necessary because sometimes time is of the essence, people. But can we not give this glorious, unifying food that crosses all social and political boundaries its due with some plates and tablecloths?

McIntosh Farm Country Store (1264 Giuntoli Lane, Arcata) may not do tablecloths but it takes the humble doughnut seriously and allows you space to enjoy them with more dignity than your car or the office breakroom. The selection is limited but significant, fresh fruit glazes, lemon and apple fillings and cinnamon sugar among them ($1.99). The yeasty doughnuts themselves are springy, chewier and denser than the typical cake or old fashioned, with a crisp edge. The swipe of strawberry glaze is like the frosting incarnation of strawberry ice cream and the huckleberry is pleasingly tart with bits of berry. If you are torn between trying a doughnut or that plate of bacon and eggs, the maple glazed with none-too-sweet apple filling and pieces of crisp, still warm bacon on top has you covered ($2.50). And possibly covered if you don't eat carefully because that is a lot of filling.

On a recent visit, I nearly missed the pan of cinnamon rolls ($3.99) just out of the oven and cooling atop the pastry case.

(PSA: Tall people, use your privilege in these moments to alert the small in stature to the presence of baked goods they might not be able to see. Thank you.) No icing required — they are soft, buttery spirals with an audible crunch of brown sugar.

Meltdown

Artisanal toast hasn't yet made its way past the Redwood Curtain but expect it soon. Just wait. Until then, you can work on grilled cheese.

The Artisan Cheese Factory, née Loleta Cheese Factory (252 Loleta Drive, Loleta), upped the ante on its bevy of samples when it opened the Queso Kings grilled cheese bar in the back of the shop. It's a no-brainer and it has saved the dignity of many. (Don't pretend you've never toothpicked your way through a pound of cheese samples one cubic centimeter at a time. We've all been there.)

The smoked beef in the Bay Area Brisket ($7) puts up no fight, pulling apart with the gentlest tug, and it comes swaddled in garlic Jack cheese, smoked cheddar and barbecue sauce on sourdough. The panini pressed bread has an audible buttery crunch and the thinness of the sandwich is deceiving. For another $4, you can add on the cookies or chips your mom would never put in your lunches and a cup of tomato soup, which is tangy with a nice dried basil flavor but comes in a coffee cup that's a little unwieldy, what with the long, architectural wedge of sandwich you're trying to dip.

Cross your fingers for sunny weather because the garden in the back — complete with a long table under an arbor and a scavenger hunt for the kids — turns your quick lunch into a garden party.

Naughty

Let's not pretend names don't matter. This week Ferndale's favorite foodie son Guy Fieri revealed that his trademark Donkey Sauce — principal export of Grilled cheese with barbecued brisket.

The Knotty Bun.

Flavortown — is just aioli. It's hard to know whether we should feel duped or just relieved on behalf of donkeys. And did aioli really need rebranding? Naming is a tricky business, the pitfalls of which include over-hyping and forced cheekiness. (See every cocktail you ordered when you turned 21.)

Humboldt Sweets Bakery and Cafe (614 Main Street, Ferndale), where Fieri and his Diners, Drive-Ins and Dives crew have filmed, sells out of its playfully named Knotty Buns ($5) if you don't get there early enough on the weekend. What appears to be a jam-topped brioche is actually a knot (we see what you did there) of cinnamon roll dough scraps — flaky at the edges, streaked with cinnamon and glaze — anchored by a cream cheese center and topped with a dollop of jammy raspberry sauce. It's a heavy kitchen sink of justifiably breakfast-y indulgences in a little paper cupcake liner. Does it live up to the naughty hype of its name? Once you give up on your fork and start pulling at the chunks of cinnamon roll, dabbing and scooping at the berry and cream cheese, your fingers sticky as a toddler's — yes. Yes, it does. Have it on the patio with its sweet backdrop of flowers, brazenly close to the church down the street. ●

Get the Folk Up

By Andy Powell

thesetlist@northcoastjournal.com

Thursday

You might want to start getting comfortable up in Blue Lake in the run up to the Humboldt Folklife Festival. Start off this evening at the Mad River Brewery with folky fiddle tunes from Fingal, which will be starting it up around 6 p.m. and for free. Remember, kids and dogs are welcome, but leashes for both are preferred. For something completely different, international Afrobeat grooves are on the menu at Humboldt Brews tonight at 9 p.m., courtesy of Barcelona's Alma Afrobeat Ensemble. Welcome them to our northern slice of California with a $10 bill at the door. The Jam in Arcata hosts bass heavyweight Bobby Vega and Prairie Prince tonight at 10 p.m. Bobby's jammed with notables such as Sly Stone, Billy Preston, Booker T, Jerry Garcia, Bob Weir, Mickey Hart and Santana to list a few. This guy can play the four strings as funky as anyone and can read a groove like the best stylus out there. I'm not sure on the cover charge for this show, but you'll get your money's worth.

Friday

The funky jazz of locals Ultra Secret will return to the Mad River Brewery Tap Room at 6 p.m. tonight. They can hit the tight changes all while keeping you guessing what's coming next, and all while doing it free of charge. Throw 'em a tip when you find the time. Local troubadour Chuck Mayville — whom I constantly rib in this column — will be back at Gallagher's in Old Town Eureka tonight at 6 p.m. playing originals and covers. Although he's playing for free, if you leave a large enough tip, he may cover REO Speedwagon's "Can't Fight This Feeling." Local folk trio No Pardon brings its music and songs to the Humboldt Brews stage at 9 p.m. tonight to support fellow locals and five-member Americana band Rogues' Gallery. It's only $5 for these two talented bands; get there early to catch both sets. I spoke with drummer Tommy Fitzmaurice this past weekend about a recent gig he sat in with Eyes Anonymous, cranking out the hits from the '80s — needless to say he had a blast. Drummer Tyler's back on the kit and you can catch this '80s Mercedes for the Ladies in the Wave Lounge tonight at the Blue Lake Casino and Hotel at 9 p.m. and for free.

Saturday

The Humboldt Folklife Festival kicks off with music starting early today at the Mad River Brewery. Americana-trio Kingfoot starts it off at 2:45 p.m. followed by Thursday Night Bluegrass and The Detours and all for free. They'll get you warmed up for the continual live music provided by the HFF all week. It's also Pints for Nonprofits and $1 of every pint you buy goes toward the Folklife Festival. Blue Lake keeps it going as the sun begins to set with music at The Logger Bar from Wild Otis. This one almost slipped by under my radar but thankfully guitarist Rick gave me a heads up about the show (thanks for nothing, Dan). They'll be starting it up around 9 p.m. or so and you'll hear some roots-country tunes from their recent release of Don't Let Me Fall. It's a free show, and if you like what you hear, grab a copy of the album. Playing until 1 a.m. Sunday morning, Nighthawk will be slaving away for your entertainment at the Blue Lake Casino if you don't feel like calling it on Saturday. It's also at 9 p.m. and also free. Although not in Blue Lake, MRB band the CropDusters are opening up the Doll-Con burlesque show at Humboldt Brews around 9:30 p.m. Start with the band, stay for the "pop culture themed burlesque/geeklesque show" all for only $13.

Sunday

It's Annie and Mary Day at the Humboldt Folklife Festival in Perigot Park this afternoon starting at noon. You'll hear from the Timber Ridge Boys, That Buckin' String Band, No Pardon, Gatehouse Well and The Detours. And all for free! Lizzy and the Moonbeams will be over at the Mad River Brewery starting around 5:30 p.m., if you haven't gotten your fill. They're kind and playing for free as well.

Above-mentioned Rick of Wild Otis also informs me that his other band The

The Low Notes play at Jazz Night for the Folklife Festival in Dell'Arte's Carlo Theater at 7:30 p.m. on Monday, July 10 and at Mad River Brewery at 6 p.m. on Tuesday, July 11.

Low Notes will be performing at Jazz Night for the Folklife Festival in Dell'Arte's Carlo Theater at 7:30 p.m. I don't know the exact order of the lineup but joining them will be the RLA Trio with Francis Vanek, along with The BluntSide Quintet. It's $8 for non-members and $6 for Folklife members.

Tuesday

Missed The Low Notes last night? They're at it again but tonight at the Mad River Brewery Tap Room at 6 p.m. for free. It's Songwriters Night for the Folklife Festival and it'll be hosted by Jan Bramlett and featuring Leah Grams Johnson, Ryan Bisio, Scott William Perry and Rachael Beccaria at 7:30 p.m. in the Carlo Theater at Dell'Arte. Again, this one's $8 unless you're a Folklife member, in which case it's $2 less. Art-punker Harrison Smith, also known as Turtlenecked has a new album out and is on the road and stopping by The Outer Space in Arcata this evening. I didn't catch the exact time or price of this show, but I did see that he's touring with label-mates Cool American.

Wednesday

Piet Dalmolen is up at the MRB Tap Room doing his loopy solo guitar thing at 6 p.m. for free. He likes beer. Help him out with that. At the same time, don't forget it's also Huckleberry Flint night ... err, I mean "Under the Stars" Night in Dell'Arte's Amphitheater, featuring some bands that aren't Huckleberry Flint and then Huckleberry Flint. Oh, I kid the other bands, you're important, too — it's just that everyone loves HF so much and this is pretty much the only show they play each year. If you want to be as beloved, don't play so much. For you musicians who catch the show, know that Huck Flint has a lot going for them but pay attention to their dynamics — that's what separates the best from the rest. While you lie on the grass, drinking your beer and/or wine, staring at the stars awaiting HF, you'll be treated to the also-awesome Kenny Ray and the Mighty Rovers and Rogues' Gallery. This is one of the treats of the Folklife Festival and easily worth the $10 ticket price, much less the $7 for members. If you miss this show tonight, just know that you can catch Huck Flint next year at the Folklife Festival this very same night (couldn't help myself). Legends in their own right, Split Lip Rayfield are coming to our fair county tonight and stopping by Humboldt Brews at 9:30 p.m. These fellas have been at it for over two decades and blend together bluegrass, country, punk and metal all together into a hell of a good time. Fans will know this $10 ticket price is a rare deal.

Car chases and machinations

BABY DRIVER. Writer/director Edgar Wright — like Tarantino before him and Scorsese before him — has managed to make a successful career of being a tremendous movie nerd. Unashamed of his influences and unafraid to reveal them (Hot Fuzz, 2007 being a particularly pointed example), Wright synthesizes those myriad influences into colorful, comic creations that are at once unmistakably his own and also direct descendants of all that good stuff that preceded it. Filtering genres through the sensibility of a British kid who just can't get enough of them has produced a body of work that both encapsulates and expands the genres of influence, while also parodying them in a careful, reverent way. He's done it (often collaborating with writer/actor Simon Pegg) with zombies, buddy cops, comic books and body snatchers, to name a few. And now, with Baby Driver, Wright narrows his focus even more, with a tribute to the gritty American crime and car chase pictures of the 1970s. The result is tightly controlled, impeccably detailed, hyper-kinetic and, despite some obvious ties to its predecessors (even the title is a fun riff on Walter Hill's 1978 brooding arthouse experiment The Driver), fresh-feeling and original. More so than any of Wright's previous work (all of which I love, incidentally), Baby Driver succeeds as a new invention, a product of imagination that references its influences without tipping them overtly.

And, if we're being honest, it's a car chase movie with an impossibly rocking soundtrack, so I'm predisposed to love it.

Baby (Ansel Elgort), a kind of goofball, hot-shoe savant with chronic tinnitus and a music jones, finds himself indentured to Doc (Kevin Spacey) after brazenly boosting the wrong Mercedes. Doc, with a constantly rotating cast of strong-arm crews, engineers a series of broad-daylight bank robberies in downtown Atlanta. Baby serves as his go-to wheelman, working off his debt. Just as he's nearing completion of that task, though, things start to go sideways. Baby falls for a charming diner waitress named Debora (Lily James), while his high-profile highway hijinks attract increasing attention. Tensions within Doc's organization run ever higher, with Baby at the intersection of dangerously violent paranoia and infighting.

"Actually ..."

Elgort finds just the right balance here, playing Baby as charming and capable but also painfully awkward, even dorky. He's haunted by the car crash that killed his parents and wrecked his hearing, but has within him the courage and resilience to do terrible things if called upon. He's a fully formed character, in other words, a type beyond stereotype or archetype — a heightened combination of traits observable in everyday life. The same holds true for the rest of the cast of characters: Spacey, deploying his clipped cadence and wry humor to great effect, infuses Doc with a balance of cruelty and compassion; Jon Hamm and Jamie Foxx go toe to toe as equally hair-triggered bank robbers with irreconcilable differences; Debora transcends the tropes of the beautiful girl next door, somehow carrying off doe-eyed innocence with a knowing wink.

Stylistically, Baby Driver is very much its own thing. Wright has pop songs wall to wall on the soundtrack, many of them emanating from Baby's ever-present iPod. That soundtrack, as a result, becomes much more a part of the movie than background. Characters sing and dance along, drivers execute alternately balletic and brutal chases and stunts in time, the camera moves and cuts work together with the songs to create a feeling of constant motion, a buoyant, energizing effect that sets up and serves as counterpoint to the rather extreme violence and darkness of the movie's third act. Wright and his director of photography Bill Pope even manage to nail a nostalgic look to the piece without it feeling like a throwback. The light and space of the movie, particularly in the nighttime sequences, call back to the dirty glory of the '70s, where the arthouse and the grindhouse sometimes sat on the same foundation. But, as I mentioned, Baby Driver may be the most original of Wright's work, both because and in spite of its distinct genre connections. R. 113M.

BROADWAY, FORTUNA, MILL CREEK, MINOR.

THE BEGUILLED. I must bashfully admit to never having seen Don Siegel's 1971 version, but that may be all for the better. Remakes (reboots, whatever) frustrate me more often than not and I find it best to approach each work as its own, unshaded by preconceived notions. Here, writer/director Sofia Coppola, working both from the earlier screenplay by Grimes Grice and John B. Sherry and the source novel by Thomas Cullinan, creates a gorgeously atmospheric Southern gothic thriller suffused with suppressed desire, xenophobia and distrust.

Somewhere in Virginia in 1864, Miss Martha (Nicole Kidman) continues to operate her rural school for girls, albeit in a much diminished capacity. As artillery thuds continually in the distance, she and Miss Edwina (Kirsten Dunst) continue to teach and care for their five remaining pupils, those without homes to return to as the conflict intensified. Into their midst comes Corporal John McBurney (Colin Farrell), a wounded Union soldier fleeing the war. His presence creates immediate tension, sexual, political and otherwise. Miss Martha chooses to nurse the soldier back to health, thereby postponing the more difficult decision of whether or not to turn him over to their own Confederate troops. As days go by, it becomes ever clearer that the situation is untenable.

Beautifully photographed by Philippe Le Sourd, impeccably acted (the young women in the cast give performances every bit as full and challenging as their more experienced counterparts), lugubrious and painstakingly concise, The Beguiled creates a deliciously rich and disturbing effect that lingers long after the end credits. R. 94M.
